“ Amelia, it has been so many years, too many. Now you know how often I thought of you. I sit here thinking of you now, remembering the last time we hung out, you showed me your new house. I was so proud of you. We toured the impressive basement, and laughed at the amount of clothes you had down there. We drove to that place down the street, what was it called? You swore by their fettuccine alfredo, and it lived up to the hype. On the drive back, the food filled the car with a delicious smell. We talked about highlighting our hair. We plopped down in front of your t.v. on your living room floor and watched Two and a Half Men, you got the biggest kick out of Charlie Sheen. I can't remember what you named him, but you had rescued a bobcat in New Hampshire. You had heard him whimpering and in desperate need of warmth, comfort and love. You nursed him back to health. Remember how high he could jump?! I couldn't stop laughing at how high he could jump! You had a pet bobcat. We had wine, and talked about when we first met - in that Boston law office where you taught me so much - and about going to see more concerts together - all the things that people catch up on when it's been a while. Life had gotten pretty rocky in Malden over these past few years and we hadn't touched base in far too long, but I would look you up on Facebook and check your happenings and whereabouts every now and again. Even when you don't speak with an old friend on a day to day basis, you live comfortably just knowing that their alive and happy. That feeling changed for me today. It took my breath away. It turned my stomach. I shook my head “no, no.” The world is quieter now. Who could ever forgot your spirit on earth. We can only imagine your spirit in Heaven. I won't forget you ever my friend. Give my brother an angelic hug for me...until we meet again.

“ Had so many memories of Amelia! Loved it when she sent different restaurants to my house when I was working, pizza, Chinese, and so on. She loved to play jokes on Al. One day I called to order a pizza, they took us off the delivery list. LOL. Loved you Amelia, you will be greatly missed!
